Explanation

The Ichimonji School flourished from the early Kamakura to the Nanbokuchō period in Bizen province. The name of this school goes back to some of its smith signing with the character for "One" (ichi), or with the character for "One" followed by an individual name below or just an individual name. The Ichimonji workmanship started in the early Kamakura period with more ko-midare than chōji along the ha and an overall resemblance to the Ko-Bizen style. By the mid-Kamakura period, the deki had changed to a flamboyant chōji-midare hamon combined with a prominent midare-utsuri.

This blade shows a rather standing-out itame that is mixed with mokume and that features a midare-utsuri. The hamon is a flamboyant ō-chōji in nioi-deki with ko-nie with a bright nioiguchi and many ups and downs that is mixed chōji, gunome, and with many ashi and yō. Thus, we have here the typical workmanship of the mid-Kamakura period Ichimonji School. The chōji are magnificent and among all works attributed to this school particularly high and even reach the shinogi in places and the blade is of an excellent deki.
